

If Stories Could Move Mountains

A Workshop For Dedicated Storytellers

In Germany

What if stories really can move mountains? If you could be more confident your storytelling was moving the right mountains? This workshop helps you consider which mountain you are burning to move and how best to apply your storytelling in moving it.

Carl Gough has developed effective tools that will dramatically help you with applied storytelling, creating and telling stories in a way that supports the changes you would like to see in this world. Whether your mountain be climate change, social justice, women's liberation, racism, oppression or any other issue - this workshop will help you

- find your true mountain
- recognise how to move it to a better place
- pursue greater impact whilst keeping the magic of storytelling alive

How rewarding!

The best way to get an idea of this magic will be Carl's show 'Nexus'. 'Nexus' will be presented the evening right before the workshop and your ticket is included as part of the weekend workshop package.

But beware! Things might change for you after this ...

A Workshop by Carl Gough from Wales

Carl has been telling stories since 2005, with a diverse career and life experience before that. Enter Covid. An experienced workshop facilitator, social enterprise and charity advisor, biologist and environmental educator, Carl then realised he needed to revive the belief and optimism of his younger self. Reconnecting to what matters has changed Carl as a human being and particularly as a storyteller. Share his inspiration at www.storytelling.wales.
